Resources to Talk to Children and Youth about Racism

- A four-page document of anti-racism resources, specifically for white parents, capturing many of the resources listed below
- Center for Racial Justice Education has a great selection of resources
- Teaching Tolerance has resources across age ranges, including these robust, ready-to-use classroom lessons offering breadth and depth, spanning essential social justice topics, and reinforcing critical social emotional learning skills.
- List of young children's books to support conversations on race, racism, and resistance
- The Conscious Kid website and Instagram provides recommended books, infographics, a guide to talking to kids about racism by age, and more.
- An age-by-age guide on talking to kids about racism, from infants/toddlers to teens/tweens
- Another age-by-age guide on talking to kids about fighting hate and racism
- A shareable infographic on talking to your kids based on age range
- A Teen Vogue op-ed, written by a student activist and community organizer, on how to take anti-racist action in your life
- MENTOR, the national mentoring partnership, has released:
  - A guide for adults supporting and serving young people who are navigating violence and trauma
  - Resources for adults working alongside boys and young men of color
  - Online modules for adults exploring their own biases and understanding of race and identity
- America's Promise released a statement including resources, research, and a list of national youth-serving organizations
- The Afterschool Alliance provides resources for understanding and responding to incidents of bias
- Camara Jones TedTalk on allegories on race and racism